Artwork sparks bigoted remarks

Hundreds give interpretations of new mural in Dewey Square ◗ Some use prejudicial slurs ◗ ICA says the work is consistent with artists' style

A zealous debate is brewing over a new mural in Dewey Square that depicts a large, colorful character peering out from behind a red shirt wrapped around his head.

The controversy began after Boston's Fox 25 posted a photograph of the 70-by-70-foot mural on its Facebook page Saturday. About 24 hours later, the post had racked up about 530 racially centered comments, and roughly 100 "shares," with many people under the wrong impression that the character is wearing a Muslim headscarf.

The station posted the photo with the caption, "This is a new mural on a Big Dig ventilation building. What does it look like to you?"

Facebook users quickly responded, with several people commenting that it looked like "a terrorist," many referring directly to Muslims.

James Richards said that it looked like "a towel head islamist holding a gun." Paul Morceau agreed, saying it looked like a "Muslim Terrorist."

Scott Englehardt weighed in, calling the character "an allah loving united states hating individual."

Several people went further, making connections to the 9/11 terrorist attacks that originated at Logan Airport.

"Suprised they did not do a Jet. This is a great example of pure liberal bull. Is the city proud that the 9/11 monsters loaded up at Logan?" wrote Jim Dayotas.

Brazilian brothers and graffiti artists Gustavo and Otavio Pandolfo, known as "Os Gemeos," or "twins" in Portuguese, created the temporary mural to promote their exhibition at the Institute of Contemporary Art.

The subjects of their artwork range from family portraits to commentary on social and political circumstances, as well as Brazilian folklore.

When asked for comment, ICA Spokeswoman Kelly Gifford said in an e-mail: "These yellow-colored characters are an iconic and recurrent feature in Os Gemeos' work and are depicted in a wide variety of situations," and that "the figures are frequently shown wearing whimsical hats, colorful hoods or scarves — another hallmark feature of the artists' work."

She went on to say, "Os Gemeos hope their mural will bring color and energy to the streets of Boston as well as inspire curiosity and imagination."

Many of the commentators jumped to defend the artists.

"To me, it looks like a surefire way to prove how racist and ignorant people are. For examples, see all posts above this one," wrote K. Allen Wood.

When asked to comment on the current controversy, Gifford said, "We are not commenting on Fox's coverage."

Fox 25, however, is covering the controversy brewing on its Facebook page, and reported that the curator of the project, Pedro Alonzo, "can't believe that's what people perceive from the piece of art. He says the character in the mural is a little boy wearing pajama pants with a shirt wrapped around his head."

Mayor Thomas M. Menino could not be reached for comment.

Fox's fault?

Some people lashed out at Fox 25:

Melissa Obleada wrote, "Shame on you, Fox 25, for purposely choosing a low quality, obstructed photo to skew peoples' first impressions. Is getting a rise out of your followers and upping your social media interactions all that matter to you?"

T employees to be honored

BOSTON. The MBTA on Wednesday will honor two employees who last month saved a suicidal woman lying on the Orange Line tracks.

T driver Ellen Coulter, 52, was rounding a bend near State Street Station around 4:10 p.m. on July 17 when she saw the woman lying on the tracks. She was able to stop the train less than a foot from the woman, according to MBTA police.

Station inspector Jacqueline Osorio, 32, had the power turned off and went into the pit to help the woman out.

"The measures taken by both personify their dedication and professionalism and reflect greatly upon themselves and the Authority and are worthy of praise," Transit Police Chief Paul S. MacMillan said in a statement.

Both Coulter and Osorio will receive commendations. GLOBE

According to MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo, Ha ran out in front of the bus, and the driver has not been cited for any violations.

Little girl, age 4, seriously injured in late-night rollover in O'Neil Tunnel

A 4-year-old girl suffered life-threatening injuries after a rollover accident in the Tip O'Neill Tunnel just after midnight Sunday.

State Police said the girl and a 24-year-old woman were ejected from a Toyota 4 Runner around 12:24 a.m., after it swerved to avoid crashing into a Chevrolet Malibu.

Police say Fatima Terif, 29, of East Boston was driving the Malibu in the middle lane and attempted to move into the left lane.

The 4 Runner, driven by a Axel Delgado, 26, of Malden, was in the left lane and had to swerve to avoid the Malibu.

The 4 Runner also carried a second women and a man in their early 20s, a 5-year-old boy and the 4-year-old girl, who police say was not in a car seat — a violation of state law.

Police said the girl was in critical condition at Mass General yesterday afternoon and described her injuries as life-threatening.

According to State Police, "The sudden maneuvers caused the driver to lose control of the 4 Runner, which rolled over and slid to a final resting position on its driver's side across the middle left travel lane. The Malibu struck the concrete barrier and came to rest in the left lane."

Both drivers and five passengers in the 4 Runner were taken to Boston hospitals.

Delgado was summonsed for operating with a suspended license and a child passenger seatbelt violation.

Terif was issued a civil citation for marked lanes violation.

State Police said other charges against both Delgado and Terif could also be sought based on the outcome of the investigation.

Seven dead in shooting at Wisconsin Sikh temple

DARREN HAUCK/GETTY IMAGES

▶ Police surrounded the Sikh temple where a gunman stormed the service and opened fire yesterday in Oak Creek, Wis.

A gunman killed six people and critically wounded three at a Sikh temple during Sunday services before police shot him dead. The attack is being treated as domestic terrorism, police said.

The gunman opened fire upon entering the kitchen at the Sikh Temple of Wisconsin in suburban Milwaukee at about 11:30 a.m. EST as women were preparing a Sunday meal, witnesses said. They described the shooter as a white male.

Turban-wearing Sikhs are often mistaken for Muslims, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation is overseeing the probe into the shootings, Oak Creek Police Chief John Edwards said.

"We're treating this as a domestic terrorist incident," he told reporters.

Four people were shot and killed inside the sprawling temple. Three, including the gunman, were killed outside. The gunman ambushed and shot a police officer several times after the officer responded to a 911 call and was helping a shooting victim, Edwards said.

A second officer shot and killed the gunman. Edwards did not have information about the identity of the gunman or as to what kinds of weapons he had used.

The wounded officer, a 20-year veteran, was taken to a hospital and is expected to survive, according to Edwards.

The Oak Creek shooting is the latest in a series of gun rampages in the suburban United States.

The shooting came little more than two weeks after a gunman opened fire at a theater in Aurora, Colo., killing 12 people and wounding 58. In January 2011, then-Congresswomen Gabrielle Giffords was the target of an assassination attempt in which six people were killed and 13 were wounded.

"The gunman is worse than the one at the theater a couple of weeks ago because he targeted an entire community," said temple member Jagatjit Sidhu.

Lone gunman

Witnesses at the temple had said there was more than one gunman, but Edwards said reports of multiple gunmen were common in incidents that involved only one shooter.

Loughner to plead guilty in Arizona shooting spree

PHOENIX. Jared Loughner, the man accused of killing six people and wounding then-U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords in 2011, is set to plead guilty in a Tucson court tomorrow, a person familiar with the case said.

▶ Loughner

The source confirmed that the federal government believed Loughner was now competent to stand trial and will argue that in court on Tuesday.

Loughner is willing to change his plea to guilty at the previously scheduled hearing, the source said.

Psychiatric experts who have examined Loughner were scheduled to testify in a mental competency hearing tomorrow that he was competent to stand trial and understood the 49 charges against him, the Los Angeles Times reported earlier.

A spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's office in Phoenix said he could "neither confirm nor deny" whether Loughner would plead guilty.

Scientist: Heat waves are caused by global warming

SCOTT OLSON/GETTY IMAGES

▶ A corn crop failed to mature in a field July 28, 2011 near Perryton, Texas. The severe drought caused most dry-land (non-irrigated) crops in the area to fail.

The Texas drought last year, the Russia heat wave in 2010 and other extreme weather "certainly would not have occurred" without global warming, according to a paper prepared by a top U.S. government climate scientist.

Abnormal weather episodes were so rare from 1951 to 1980 that the recent events can only be explained by the effects of the increasing accumulation of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, according to research published today. If carbon emissions continue unchecked, such events will become routine, with more extremes common within 50 years.

"We now know that the chances these extreme weather events would have happened naturally — without climate change — is negligible," James Hansen, the top climate-change scientist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and writer of the paper, said in a statement. "The natural changes in weather from day to day and year to year [don't explain those events]."

The paper by Hansen and two co-authors, to be published in the peer-reviewed Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, was written before the recent record heat waves and drought across the U.S. Once that data is analyzed, it probably will show links to global warming as well, Hansen wrote in the Washington Post. BLOOMBERG

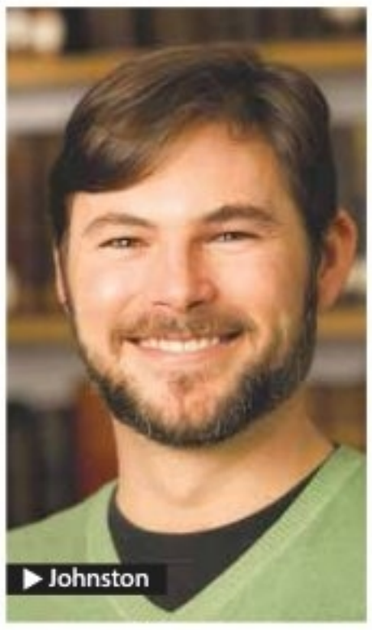
Environmentalism and religion find common ground in higher education

For more than seven years, Wake Forest professor Lucas F. Johnston studied the intersection of religious faith and the environmental movement. But he often found himself frustrated by a basic disconnect: Worldwide, there was a rapidly growing effort to link theology with environmental consciousness, but this didn't appear to reap any measurable positives for the planet.

People changed their philosophy, but didn't change their behavior.

Now Johnston is at the forefront of a movement to further incorporate environmental sustainability into higher education curricula. But for Johnston, an ideological shift isn't good enough. He wants results.

"For a long time, the religion and ecology field was, basically, advancing popularized narratives about why this or that religious tradition was inherently green," says Johnston. "In a similar fashion, we saw a lot of anecdotal stories coming out of higher education. That's a good first step. … But now we need to gather some empirical data. We need to find out what changes systems and people."



▶ Johnston

"Basically, if you take the idea of sustainability seriously, we're talking about our survival as a species. We have to think about educating students about that, because most of them have no sense of what a sustainable society looks like."
JOHNSTON

Johnston recently edited a book that attempts to do just that. "Higher Education for Sustainability: Cases, Challenges, and Opportunities from Across the Curriculum" was released last week, containing some of the most thorough research and analysis on green courses in higher education to date.

"Is there a guiding sense of what 'sustainability' should be in higher education? On the operations side — yes. Conceptually and practically — no. But I think that's a good thing. All sustainable solutions are context-dependent. So in this book we're looking at specific schools — specific contexts," explains Johnston. "Basically, if you take the idea of sustainability seriously, we're talking about our survival as a species. We have to think about educating students about that, because most of them have no sense of what a sustainable society looks like."

Economy 'continuing to recover'

The White House said on Friday that data showing U.S. hiring increased in July showed the economy was continuing to recover and stressed the jobless rate was "essentially unchanged" despite its rise from 8.2 percent to 8.3 percent.

"Today's employment report provides further evidence that the U.S. economy is continuing to recover from the worst downturn since the Great Depression," Alan Krueger, chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, said in a statement.

Pattinson, Stewart still not over each other yet

Although she could probably afford to rent a small state, Kristen Stewart has taken refuge with friend Giovanni Agnelli after leaving the house she formerly shared with Robert Pattinson.

Agnelli is not, as his Twitter feed suggests, a random 16-year-old "Twilight" superfan with an unhealthy interest in Stewart's sex life. Instead, he's a friend of the actress who produced her 2010 film "Welcome to the Rileys," and he's upset at how the media is treating his new roomie in the wake of her affair with "Snow White" director Rupert Sanders.

"The spin that keeps growing on this story is staggering. There was no onset affair. Stop printing lies," he posted to Twitter, where he's been on a pro-Kristen campaign for weeks.

Robert Pattinson, who is hiding out at Reese Witherspoon's ranch, isn't quite buying Agnelli's line about Stewart being "like a little sister" to him.

"Rob knows Agnelli and has been calling him a lot since Kristen has been there," a source tells RadarOnline. "He wants to know why Kristen is staying there at his house. He is super angry now and has accused Giovanni of sleeping with Kristen, too."

Kristen, for her part, is also still pretending that she isn't very rich, very young or very good looking and is obediently moping around the house. "Kristen hasn't showered or changed or washed her hair in several days," the source tells Radar. "She is laying around in her T-shirt and shorts and eating ice cream."

Happy holidays, indeed

Lindsay Lohan and Charlie Sheen have already given so much to this page that we could hardly believe this news: Even though he died in "Scary Movie 4," Sheen has rallied and signed on to the fifth installment along with franchise newcomer Lohan, reports E! Online.

The film is due in theaters Jan. 11, when most celebs are still peddling that "I'm so thankful and want to give back" holiday nonsense.

At least she still dreams

Kendall Jenner — better known as the Kardashian's tall half-sister — doesn't want to be just any runway model. "I want to be the next Gisele Bundchen," she tells E! Online. "Everything she does, who she is, what she's done, she's just amazing."

Kendall, honey, we want to be the next Philip Roth. But take it from us — hanging around with the Kardashians for too long is dream poison.

Three-time winner Batman knocks down 'Total Recall'

Batman movie "The Dark Knight Rises" dominated U.S. and Canadian box offices for a third time, holding firm to the weekend's No. 1 spot and leaving the debut of science fiction remake "Total Recall" in distant second place.

"Dark Knight Rises" racked up an estimated $36.4 million in ticket sales from theaters in the United States and Canada, distributor Warner Bros. said on Sunday. The movie is the third installment in a popular Batman trilogy starring Christian Bale.

"Total Recall," featuring Colin Farrell in a role played by Arnold Schwarzenegger in 1990, grossed $26 million from Friday through Sunday. Family sequel "Diary of a Wimpy Kid: Dog Days" took the No. 3 slot, earning $14.7 million.

"Dark Knight Rises" has hauled in $354.6 million at North American theaters since its July 20 debut, ranking as one of the highest-grossing films in movie history. Still, it stands behind its 2008 predecessor, "The Dark Knight," which collected $393 million domestically through three weekends.

"Dark Knight Rises" international sales have now topped $378 million, for a global total of $733 million through Sunday, according to Warner Bros.

Jeffrey Goldstein, executive vice president of theatrical distribution, said the studio was confident the film would continue performing well in the coming weeks. REUTERS

ONE DROP OF MIRACLE CAN CHANGE YOUR LIFE

"My family and I decided to build an industrial estate. To complete constructing, we obtained a bank loan but, later on, we were unable to keep up with the re-payments. With no one to help, we called upon God. We annointed the building with the Drop of Miracle and asked God to intervene for us. Soon after this action, opportunities came, enabling us to raise one-third of the amount we owed. Today, we are the owners of the estate, and that's a miracle!"

JUSTICE AT 225 WORDS PER MINUTE

Court reporting requires quick fingers and an even quicker mind ● Training can take two to three years ● Certification can make you a more valuable prospect

For an ambitious student with the right combination of talent and patience, court reporting may be a career worth considering.

But reaching 225 words per minute on a stenotype is no walk in the park, and it's hard to know if you have what it takes before committing to the training.

"It's not for everyone. Speaking very bluntly, you have to be a nervous wreck. You are sitting at the edge of your seat. You have to get every word, every utterance," says Patti Blair, who owns her own Chicago-based court reporting business and has been a licensed court reporter for 47 years. "If you're a laid-back person, this profession is not for you."

PATTI BLAIR, LICENSED COURT REPORTER

Qualified individuals can earn the National Court Reporters Association's Registered Professional Reporter credential by passing a rigorous test; their dictation speeds must exceed 200 words per minute.

"There's always people that drop out, just like any college — but not necessarily because they can't do the speed," says Cohen.

Orleans Technical Institute in Philadelphia offers a two-to-three-year program that includes the RPR exam, though the school was unable to specify how many students pass the test. However, Marlene Cohen — an employment specialist from Orleans — was quick to point out that passing the RPR is not required for all professional positions in the field. Those who persevere through the training can still seek employment.

ORLEANS TECHNICAL INSTITUTE IN PHILADELPHIA

▶ Tiffany Wesley is a graduate of the court reporting program at Orleans Tech.

$48,530
As of 2010, per the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, there were about 22,000 court reporters employed nationwide. The median annual pay was $48,530 as of 2011. From 2010-2020, growth in this field will be about 14%.

"For anyone who is really truly driven and interested in doing this, I think the first course would let them know if they could handle the speed," adds Blair. "But I would say they need to stick it out until they start taking dictation — about four to six weeks."

Life after unemployment: How to ease back into the workplace

Quoted

"Once you're back to work, don't be afraid to ask questions."
CAITLIN DAY

Extended unemployment can make going back to work feel like diving into icy cold water — it can be a shock. But if you stick in one toe at a time, you'll get acclimated much sooner.

While you're getting your feet wet, make sure that you understand what you're getting yourself into. "Try to get a clear picture from your boss, before you start, of expectations for the first week, month and quarter. This way you can pace yourself right from the start," explains Caroline Ceniza-Levine, co-founder of SixFigureStart.

Splash around a little to explore your surroundings. "Once you're back to work, don't be afraid to ask questions," says Caitlin Day, education and outreach manager at Career Wardrobe. "Your co-workers and supervisors were new once too, and should be able to offer you tips on how to fit into your new environment as well as answer questions about your role." It's expected that you rely on co-workers to help you understand the new position, so take advantage of their expertise.

Allow yourself time to focus on your new position without getting distracted by outside factors. Michael Timmes, HR specialist at Insperity, suggests that you "reach out to family and friends to let them know that your schedule is changing and that you may not be as accessible as you were when you were unemployed. Most people will understand that you're busy getting to know your new job and will afford you some extra space." ● JULIA WEST

Good work!

Timmes makes another great point: Be proud of yourself.

▶ "You found a new job, which is great. Be sure to recognize and celebrate your achievement." It's completely acceptable to ease your way back to work, rather than taking the plunge all at once.

Congress should learn less is more

A recent letter writer, Herb Stark, almost demands that congress should "DO SOMETHING," presumedly concerning our economy. Actually, Mr. Stark has got it just backwards! Government should do a lot less, not more. What Congress should do is undo, in exact reverse order, all the unconstitutional "laws" created in the last 40-50 years. Then maybe we can get our country back to normal.

FRANK ST GEORGE, VIA E-MAIL

CEO should stick with what he knows

Where are these goofs getting that the government wants to "shut down" Chick-fil-A? No one ever said such a thing. As for the CEO: Since he knows what's best for us peons — as the religious cultists always do — where are his comments about the almost 60 percent divorce rate in this country? Eating coated chicken from a slop fast food restaurant. What a statement you've made. Not!

DONNA DI GIACOMO, VIA E-MAIL

As long as it's not harming anyone ...

I had to respond to these characters bashing Chick-fil-A. We, as Americans, have the right to believe in what we want to believe in — and these people will never change our minds, so they need to stop. We can support any group we want that doesn't harm our citizens. I am 100 percent against gay marriage and I will always be, even if one of my kids turned out gay. I am a Christian and I don't want to see any harm done to them, but I don't believe that it is a productive lifestyle for our society and the future of our children. I'm sick and tired of these gay activists trying to shove it down our throats, and I commend Dan Cathy and all Americans who stand up against this onslaught.

JOHN PALENQUE, VIA E-MAIL

Presidents need rounded character

Kudos to Larry D. Fowler for pointing out that Mitt Romney is not qualified to be president.

His analogy (imagining a sports coach as NATO commander — which is obviously ridiculous) is absolutely on point. Just because Romney has been successful in business doesn't mean he understands or is capable of fulfilling the diverse and overwhelming responsibilities of president of the United States. He seems unaware that there's a great deal more to the job description than overseeing the economy.

He also appears to lack the expansiveness of character to represent our country to the rest of the world. It's chilling to imagine placing the powers of the presidency into the hands of such a limited person.

LINDA NEVINS, VIA E-MAIL

Romney's riches no help to anyone

I'm wondering in what ways Mr. Romney, with an income of $250 million last year, has used his wealth in the last four years to create jobs. What new businesses has he started and how many people, besides campaign workers, has he hired?

Look inside USA House

- US athletes have a secret place to get away from attention in London
- Metro gets to take a special peek

For the gold

CASSANDRA GARRISON
CASSANDRA.GARRISON@METRO.US

Away from the hustle and bustle of Olympic Village in East London, U.S. athletes can quietly and privately retreat to USA House.

The USOC staked its claim to an area of London's Royal College of Art across from Hyde Park in April 2011. The state-of-the-art facility serves as a more secluded area for athletes and their families, as well as VIP ticket holders and donors.

Decorated with sponsor-themed lounges, USA House is equipped with a gourmet cafeteria, several bars, meeting rooms, a team shop — and plenty of tight security.

It may be the USA House, but it's definitely not open to all citizens of the USA. USOC officials say the decision to keep the facility private came after athletes wanted it that way.

"It did come from the request of our athletes many games ago, who wanted an additional area of refuge," USOC director of marketing and event services Lisa Reliford told Metro during a closely watched media tour. "They don't get to see their parents a lot [in the Olympic Village]. The minute they get out of the Village, everybody wants to be around them and to get their autographs. So this is an area where they can just come and decompress.

"The whole house just chants 'USA,' and it's so exciting," Reliford said.

Three events to catch today:

▶ Two of the premier U.S. women's track stars will be in action in qualifiers as hurdler Lolo Jones takes the track for the first time and Allyson Felix, coming off her 100-meter appearance, competes in her specialty, the 200-meter.

▶ The U.S. men's basketball team will get their second straight test as they face Argentina and Manu Ginobili in their last game of pool play at 5:15 p.m. EST.

▶ U.S. gymnast Gabby Douglas returns to the stage as the women's event finals enter their second day with the uneven bars. It starts bright and early at 9:50 a.m. The bars is Douglas' best apparatus, but she will again be challenged by Russians Viktoria Komova and Allya Mustafina, who finished second and third in the individual all-around.

Bobby V. avoids the axe (again)

Whether it was just sports radio banter or not this past weekend, the axe sure seemed ready to fall on Red Sox manager Bobby Valentine today.

Things looked to have bottomed out for the third time this season Saturday night when Boston blew another solid start from Clay Buchholz and the lowly Minnesota Twins came back from a five run deficit to win the third game in a row at Fenway.

Had the Red Sox not won yesterday, there would have been an early October 2011 feel to things around town this morning.

The win bought Valentine another day, if not another two weeks. But this pattern of hope (four-game win streak), despair (three-game losing streak) and last-gasp victories (Sunday) is one all too familiar to Sox fans in 2012.

The Red Sox avoided a four-game sweep at the hands of the Twins Sunday with a 6-4 victory.

Adrian Gonzalez drove in three runs, two coming via a fifth-inning home run. Franklin Morales allowed just three hits and one run over six innings.
